

FROM THE EDITORIAL DESK

Since times immemorial, there have been elements which stimulate economies, politics and geopolitical policies, some of these elements form part of the sanctioned machinery of governance and righteousness, while others flow as powerful grey undercurrents, that cannot be part of any government manifesto (expressly), the latter of these elements has today manifested itself in the world, in one of the most influential forms, i.e. 'Black Money' proliferation. The ambiguity around its origin makes it almost untraceable, thereby allowing it to pass unnoticed even while being utilized for a varied range of illegal activities. A white paper report of the Government listed down the sources of black money as money acquired through legal means but undeclared to the income tax department and money acquired through illegal activities such as narcotics trade, corruption, terrorism, money laundering and other criminal activities.

Deep-rooted corruption and ineffective governmental scrutiny on black money has given way for politicians and political parties to have non-transparent ways of funding through donations and other means. The details of the donors remain unaccounted for and the income of political parties is hidden beneath misleading account statements. Money Laundering therefore becomes an art and skill necessitating political success. This is unlike countries such as USA, Japan, Brazil, Italy, Germany, France, where the details of donors to political parties are made publically available. Even though Article 29C of the Representation of People Act, 1951 states that political parties must submit their contribution details in excess of Rs. 20,000 from a person or company to the Election Commission of India, yet this is hardly followed in reality. Financial misappropriation of public money is not new in India. Be it a politician accused in a new scam, or one listed in a bank document leak (such as the case with HSBC in 2015); it is surprising to see the same people who work for the government preach against black money by passing the Undisclosed

Foreign Income and Assets (Imposition of New Tax) Bill, 2015 ('Black Money Bill'), themselves indulge in it blatantly.

Black money is also at the epicenter of terrorism. One of the biggest ways to fund of terrorism is black money. Hence, black money enters the process usually through donors and money laundering. The 1993 Mumbai bomb blasts were 'allegedly' funded by the black money. Other business tycoon in the country, who was accused of financing international illegal arms dealings, many a times also have links to terrorism. Black money has also been used by Naxalites and other terrorist organizations for procuring weapons and other necessary materials. Acts such as illegal narcotics sale, human trafficking also are the result of black money.

Strictly implementing the Black Money bill (which taxes all foreign income at a flat rate of 30% without exceptions) and other laws will help curbing black money and thereby bring down levels of corruption in political parties by instilling accountability of finances and also block sources that fund terrorism. Bringing such activities under strict scrutiny will remove the opaque character of black money and make it far more traceable. Lax financial regulations give a leeway for money to flow unnoticed. Hence, policy makers must realize the importance of having a strategic intensive regulation of finances that will directly help in curbing black money. But it remains a question as to how to separate something so integral to the working of governments, policies, corporate so as to not set the entire nation into a state of limbo.

Rohinton Mistry, author of Family Matters puts it succinctly, "Black money is so much a part of our white economy, a tumour in the centre of the brain - try to remove it and you kill the patient."
